The project will contribute to the restoration, protection and management of globally significant mountain forest and alpine meadow ecosystems, including a number of endemic and endangered species and transboundary migrants. The project will also introduce active management of pastures, and support the development of a participatory approach to natural resource management overall. Equally importantly, the project will contribute to lasting poverty alleviation in some of the poorest areas of Azerbaijan, by introducing and catalyzing the adoption of more modern, sustainable, and value-added approaches to natural resource use and agricultural production and diversification of economic activities, including development of rural/eco-tourism.

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and make it universally accessible and useful. As a first step to fulfilling that mission, Google's founders Larry Page and Sergey

Brin developed a new approach to online search that took root in a Stanford University dorm room and quickly spread to information seekers around the globe. Google is now widely recognized as the world's largest search engine -- an easy-to-use free service that usually returns relevant results in a fraction of a second. When you visit www.google.com or one of the dozens of other Google domains, you'll be able to find information in many different languages; check stock quotes, maps, and news headlines; lookup phonebook listings for every city in the United States; search billions of images and peruse the world's largest archive of Usenet messages -- more than 1 billion posts dating back to 1981. We also provide ways to access all this information without making a special trip to the Google homepage. The Google Toolbar enables you to conduct a Google search from anywhere on the web. And for those times when you're away from your PC altogether, Google can be used from a number of wireless platforms including WAP and i-mode phones. Google's utility and ease of use have made it one of the world's best known brands almost entirely through word of mouth from satisfied users. As a business, Google generates revenue by providing advertisers with the opportunity to deliver

measurable, cost-
effective online
advertising that is relevant to the information displayed
on any given page.
This makes the
advertising useful to you as well as to the
advertiser placing it.
We believe you should know when someone
has paid to put a
message in front of you, so we always
distinguish ads from
the search results or other content on a
page. We don't sell
placement in the search results
themselves, or allow people to pay for a
higher ranking there.
Thousands of
advertisers use our
Google AdWords
program to promote their products and services on the web with targeted advertising, and we believe AdWords is the largest program of its kind. In addition, thousands of web site managers take advantage of our Google AdSense program to deliver ads relevant to the content on their sites, improving their ability to generate revenue and enhancing the experience for their users. To learn more about Google, click on the link at the left for the area that most interests you. Or type what you want to find into our search box and hit enter. Once you do, you'll be on your way to understanding why others say, "Google is the closest thing the Web has to an ultimate answer machine." What's a Google? "Googol" is the mathematical term for a 1 followed by 100 zeros. The term was coined by Milton Sirotta, nephew of American mathematician Edward Kasner, and was popularized in the book, "Mathematics and the Imagination" by Kasner and James Newman. Google's play on the term reflects the company's mission to organize the immense amount of information available on the web.

The Islam in a Democratic Azerbaijan (IDA) program is a new initiative launched by Eurasia Foundation in May 2007. The program supports the growth of democracy in Azerbaijan by encouraging public dialogue about Azerbaijan's unique experience combining Islamic tradition and democratic values. Azerbaijan is a rapidly-developing nation with a rich religious and cultural heritage. Local citizens and institutions are currently drawing upon the country's legacy of tolerance and respect for religious values while promoting democratic principles such as pluralism, freedom of speech and protection of human rights. The IDA program is designed to reinforce local efforts that promote the Azerbaijani model of a country with strong Muslim traditions embracing democracy.

11. One of the longer term objectives for Azerbaijan is to improve economic development in the non-oil sector, and one of the underpinning facilities for enabling this to happen is to have a sound real estate administration and management capacity. Revenues from the oil sector and from other sources are often invested in real estate, but the lack of legal security for real estate, inefficient transaction processes, and poor management in the development of urban areas, has resulted in a poorly functioning real estate market. In rural areas the issuance of title and security of tenure provided during the privatization period needs to be maintained

The European Union supports the use of Information and Communication Technology (ICT) in the South Caucasus Region. In a Technical Assistance project Universities and the national Research and Educational Networking Associations (ARENA, AzRENA, GRENA) will be provided with Hard- and Software and with expert know how to develop distance learning, e-Learning applications. In each country a development center (content factory) with the adequate technical equipment and a team of experts will be established. In close cooperation with local universities internet based lectures will be developed. Until September 2007 the IMC consortium, that had been selected by the EC will manage and support this project. IMC (www.im-c.de) has a long success story in supporting educational structures in large companies and universities with ICT based solutions. The aim of the EU support is to establish a basis which will strengthen the higher education reform towards the social-economic needs of the region.

CHALLENGES FOR CHILDREN IN
AZERBAIJAN: •
Deteriorating health:
Infant and maternal mortality rates are the highest in Europe.
With over 100
children dying before
the age of five for every 1,000 live births, Azerbaijan has an Under-five Mortality Rate (U5MR) ranking of 46 in the world, putting it on a par with countries that have much lower GNI per capita. One of the main problems in the health system, particularly for vulnerable groups, is access to good quality pharmaceuticals at reasonable prices. Poor nutrition is a major underlying cause of child mortality, with 10% of babies born underweight, 13% of children under five stunted, and 75% suffering from Vitamin A deficiency.

- Education: Only 11% of children pre-school, with large discrepancies between rural and urban areas. The quality of education has deteriorated since the early 1990s and many teachers have left the education system because of the falling value of their salaries and the deteriorating school environment. While enrolment rates are monitored regularly, there is no routine data on attendance rates disaggregated by gender. • Poverty: The official unemployment rate was 1.4% in October 2003, but unofficial sources suggest that more than 10% of economically active citizens are unemployed. Almost half of the population lives in poverty, i.e. below less than a dollar a day. Analyses by age-groups based on the results of household budget survey 2003 indicate that children are again the most vulnerable, with under 15 year age group having the highest poverty level 50%. • Child Protection: Around 10% of children do not live in a family environment, with significant numbers living in institutions. Precise numbers are unknown, as no comprehensive survey has been carried out. Many still believe that children receive better care in an institution. This belief, combined with low household incomes and poor regulatory mechanisms, has resulted in increased child institutionalization. As many as 15% of births go unregistered as a result of bureaucratic procedures and informal payments for registration. The emergence of “Street children” is a relatively new phenomenon and stems from the sharp drop in the economic and social status of families. Available figures are flexible and seasonable. The latest information from the Ministry of Internal Affairs says that over 500 children were registered at police stations in 2003 for petty crimes, of whom 80% were not attending school. Approximately 24 of Azerbaijan’s 65 regions are thought to be contaminated with landmines and unexploded ordnance (UXO). Of those killed by landmines or UXO to date, 13%

have been children. • Refugees and
displacement: The
ling-standing conflict
with Armenia remains unresolved and the
upheavals of 1988-
1993 continue to cause
suffering. There are nearly 1 million
internally displaced persons (IDPs) and
refugees from Armenia and other countries, over half of them women and children. Refugees and displaced people have
poverty levels 20%
higher than the national average. • HIV/AIDS: As of 2006, there were
around 1000
registered cases of HIV/AIDS. In 50% of these, injection drug use was the main
mode of transmission,
with the sharing of
needles the major

immediate cause. Knowledge about HIV/AIDS and its prevention is low. Only one third of 10-18-year olds about HIV/AIDS and slightly more than two thirds of those aged 19-24 years believe that it can be prevented. HIV/AIDS is not addressed with the seriousness warranted, and traditions prevent open discussion. OUR RESPONSE: Action on child health and nutrition: We continue to support national health reform and the decentralization of services. Recognising the huge discrepancies between official and survey data on infant, child and maternal mortality, we support improvements to the health information system. In response to the alarming level of child malnutrition, we work with the government, NGOs and youth volunteers to combat iodine deficiency disorders, anemia and Vitamin A deficiency. Within the space of three years, the percentage of households consuming iodized salt has increased from virtually zero to 70%. As a fervent supporter of breastfeeding, UNICEF continues to support the Baby-Friendly Hospital Initiative. Also, we have partnered with major donors, including the World Bank and USAID to create a national Primary Health Care policy based on the lessons learned from health and nutrition projects and the results of an assessment of the outcomes of primary health care reform. As a result of UNICEF advocacy, the government has taken full responsibility for the provision of vaccines. (with the exception of Hepatitis B) since 2003. Action on education: Based on our experience on the integration of early child care and the development of households and formal pre-school, we are working with the government and NGOs on comprehensive policy formulation in this area. We continue to be involved in the education reform process. While continuing our support of the education

reform process to increase the quality of education through
enhancing early
childhood
development,
encouraging active
learning
methodologies and
encapsulating
children's rights issues
into school
curriculum, UNICEF
aims to empower
parents and families.
Our success with
parent-teacher
associations gives us
the confidence to take this project to scale.
We are also
supporting the introduction of
interactive learning to ensure that children
learn effectively so
that they are motivated and achieve results at school. Action on
Child Protection:
UNICEF advocates

for legislative reform and supports alternatives to institutionalized child-care. Our major concerns are children without parental guidance, children whose development is undermined by family breakdown, children with disabilities, children with behavioral disorders, abused and neglected children, children on the street, children who are victims of exploitation and children in institutions. Social sector professionals are being trained to identify children with special needs and apply a community and family-based response to their development. We also work to boost the capacities of health, social welfare and educational institutions, particularly on psychological rehabilitation. UNICEF is gravely concerned about children living in mine/UXO contaminated areas, and cooperates with national partners to provide Mine Risk Education in schools in the frontline areas. We support the development of national databases on child rights and promote the use of rights-based data for policy development and monitoring. We put a special emphasis on advocacy for the protection of social services for children and women, using the CRC, CEDAW and Education for all as tools to promote and influence policy reform on child protection. Action on Young People's health, development and participation: We support efforts to inform young people about the dangers of high-risk behaviors, including HIV/AIDS, with a special focus most at risk, such as IDPs and refugees and other impoverished and marginalized groups. Our main strategy is the empowerment and participation of young people and our collaboration with young people's organizations aims to promote active participation. Our involvement in the HIV/AIDS country theme group has contributed to the government's efforts to develop a national plan of action for HIV/AIDS. We are committed to increasing media activities by, with and for children. Also we support projects that allow young people to highlight the problems they face, to propose solutions and prepare them for a society where freedom of speech and thought prevails.
